welcome

The world of contemporary fine art is made up of a wide variety of individuals.

Artists, gallery owners, art publishers, critics, all these wield considerable influence on the art market.

But perhaps the single most influential group is the one of which you are a member - the art collectors.

This magazine has been produced exclusively for you. It presents an exceptional portfolio of collectable Limited Editions, Sculpture and new Original Paintings, from a group of international artists whose work we believe is worth owning. Not because it will bring the owner status or financial return, although it may do both these things, but because it will bring unalloyed pleasure.

We hope you will enjoy Fine Art Focus, and that you will be visiting the gallery soon to view the complete collection.

the real thing

As the UK's leading contemporary realist, Darren Baker has enjoyed a level of success that most artists only dream of.

Still in his early thirties, he has produced an impressive portfolio of figurative work and portraiture which graces many prestigious public and private collections around the world.

He has worked alongside and produced paintings for such star sporting names as Lewis Hamilton, Steven Gerrard and Amir Khan, while his non-sporting portraits include HRH Prince Charles and Tony Blair which hang in St James's Palace and Downing Street respectively.

For a young contemporary artist to achieve this kind of status and recognition is extremely rare and can only be put down to Darren's unique gift for naturalistic description.

The authenticity of his figures causes a momentary confusion in the viewer as each nuance is conveyed with such accuracy and truth that we find ourselves questioning whether we are looking at a beautiful photograph, or an extraordinary painting.

Safe as Houses

It is all too easy to be charmed by the quirky yet stylish harbour scenes of South Western artist Rebecca Lardner.

But to look closely at these images is to glimpse a world of beam trawlers, long liners and crabbers; a thriving community, overlooked by painted or stone faced granite cottages. Ancient medieval harbour walls divide the shore from the sea, and highlight the natural curves of the classic English harbour.

For Rebecca the proximity of the busy sea and the safety of home is a major source of inspiration. She draws the two elements together with a distinctive palette of sea colours, blues, greens, greys and teals, which make her work instantly recognisable. The unspoken contrast between the constant activity of the harbour and the watchful serenity of the fishermen's cottages is in her own words, "a composition waiting to be realised."

Luminous World II

These monumental new compositions from Steve and Chris Rocks are breathtaking in their scope and ambition.

Their atmospheric palette and extraordinary energy combine with their sheer size to create an awe-inspiring impact.

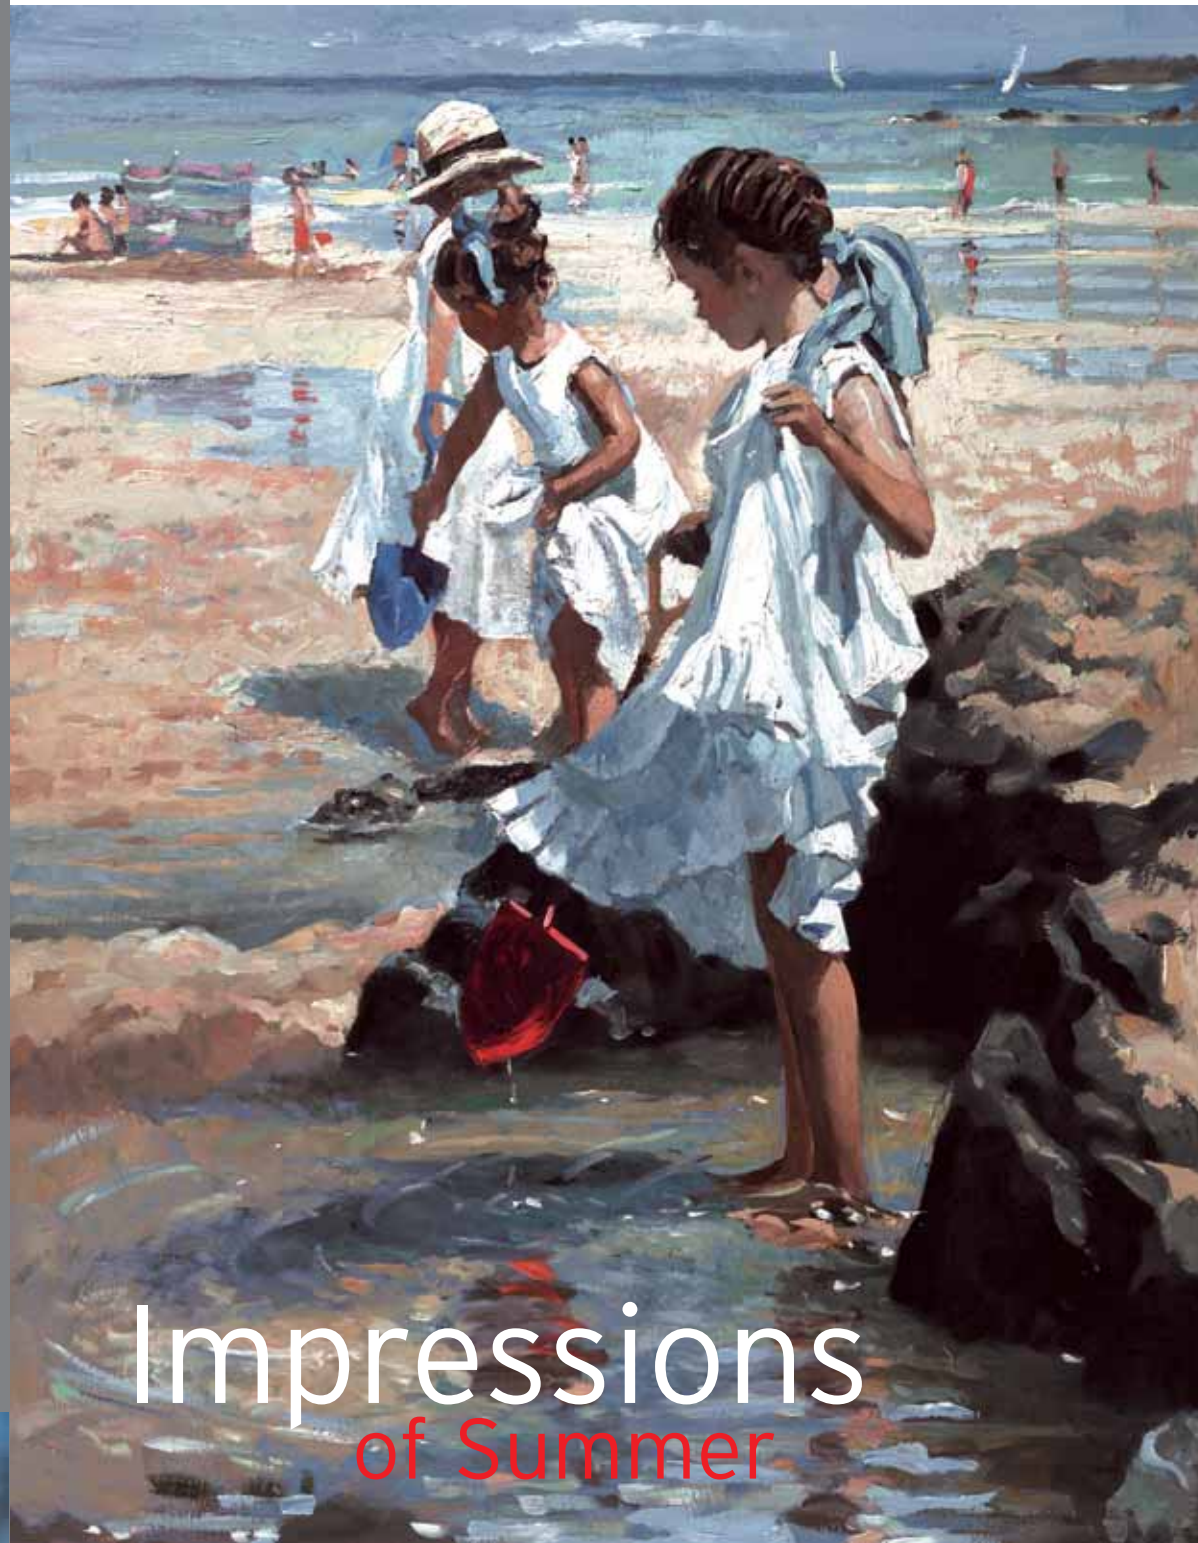

While the work of the Rocks brothers appears abstract, it is in fact highly representative. Each image is inspired by the lie of the land - the contours and colours rather than the literal details of the scene - so has its roots in reality rather than imagination. As Steve explains: "Creating this free interpretation of the landscape is both challenging and liberating. We paint what we see but it is an intensely personal shared vision."

face|value

Over the last 30 years Sherree has become the country's premier impressionist artist, a fact that was acknowledged recently when Laurence Llewelyn-Bowen presented her with an award for 'The UK's leading Modern Impressionist' at a red carpet event in London.

But although she is known mainly to her collectors for her elegant society scenes and entrancing childhood images, Sherree recently came to prominence for her portraiture when she was invited to appear on the Christmas Special of the hit TV series 'To the Manor Bowen'. Sherree was shown painting a superb portrait of Jackie Llewelyn-Bowen to make a pair with one she had previously created of Laurence. The famously flamboyant couple were delighted that Sherree had seen past Jackie's public face to the softer reality, and agreed that the paintings brought a stylish touch of authenticity to their new country home.

The cityscape has become a hugely important genre over the last few years, establishing itself as a contemporary rival to the traditional rural landscape.

While this development is due in part to the increasing importance of urban style and the culture of 21st century city living, artistic acknowledgement must go to London-based Brazilian artist Henderson Cisz.

Voted 'Artist of the Year 2007', Henderson is also the holder of the coveted John Solomon Trophy, which is awarded annually to the artist judged to have made the most impact on the art market over the year; official recognition that his work has been both successful and immensely influential in the world of fine art.

ORIGINAL CONTEMPORARY ARTWORK

To own a piece of Original artwork has long been an impossible dream for the majority of art lovers. But in recent years our priorities have changed, and we have begun to see the possession of unique collector's items as an investment in our quality of life. We offer an eclectic cross section of the best artists and artwork, bringing the art buying public access to an unrivalled portfolio of fabulous contemporary Originals, a small selection of which is illustrated here.

Philip Raskin has developed a painterly impasto style; using the texture of the paint and the shape of the brushwork, he gives each of his luminous seascapes its own reality, rather than allowing it to be a smooth window onto a world beyond. With a trademark soft palette and dramatic skies, the overall effect magically captures the textures, moods and changeable light of his native Scotland.

Canadian-based Russian artist Maya Eventov uses a distinctive technique which combines impasto oil painting and etching. By building up each composition over several weeks she creates a mesmerising vocabulary of texture and nuance. These atmospheric forest scenes vibrate with light and colour, and call to mind a stained glass window lit from behind by dazzling sunlight.

Born and brought up in the Seychelles Harry Brioche was entranced by the "moody" skies he found in the UK and loves travelling around the country photographing and painting what he sees. Strongly influenced by such masters of the landscape as Turner and Vernet, his stunning oils portray beautifully lit scenes of the British countryside, and he sums up his latest work as "lighting the landscape".

GOOD VIBRATIONS

Danielle's exquisite floral images vibrate with life, energy and riotous colour.

Her deceptively loose, impressionistic style disguises the intricacy of her brushwork and the stylish formality of each composition.

This world-renowned Canadian artist has exhibited to great acclaim for over 30 years, and her distinctive fusion of eastern and western artistry has led to her works being highly prized by collectors from both sides of the Pacific.

Rolf Harris

54 years ago Rolf adopted the UK as his home and we responded by taking him to our hearts. Today he is the UK's best-loved painter.

Rolf Harris came to the UK from Australia as a young art student. His talent was quickly recognised and his work was featured in two consecutive Summer Exhibitions at the Royal Academy. Although he returned to Perth after graduation, he retained great affection for the UK and after several years he finally decided to make it his home.

We responded by taking Rolf to our hearts, and he soon became something of an institution. His huge talent combined with his warm and charming personality has won him many friends and admirers, and he has become the best-known and best-loved UK-based artist of his generation.

Rolf is a versatile painter who encourages us to view each scene from his own unique perspective. His characteristic use of unexpected colours and intricate shadowing often leads to him being categorised as a modern impressionist, but his observational skill and portrayal of fine details is second to none.

Under the Tuscan Sun

As the cradle of the Renaissance movement, the birthplace of Leonardo da Vinci, Michelangelo and Botticelli and the home of some of Europe's finest galleries, Tuscany has an impressive artistic history.

Its radiant skies and rolling hills have attracted artists from all over the world for hundreds of years and given it a great tradition of landscape painting which now rests in the creative hands of Bruno Tinucci. Born and brought up in Tuscany, Bruno is intimately acquainted with every detail of this most beautiful of regions. He is uniquely placed to convey the vivid scarlet of the poppy fields, the way each shadow falls, and most of all, how the quality of the sunlight lends an extravagant brightness to every colour.

nothing lost in translation

The Doug Hyde phenomenon that has swept across the UK, Europe and the USA has now travelled east and hit the land of the rising sun.

Doug is delighted to have this opportunity to meet a whole new audience of collectors, and to encounter such a different culture. Due to the intensity of his schedule he will be moving around a great deal, but still intends to keep a sketchbook diary to share with his family on his return.

Peter Knox has been described as a 21st Century Lowry - an artist chronicler of day-to-day life from a precious period of our history.

He himself describes his work as representing a 'visual diary' of his life and experiences growing up in the North of England. His evocative industrial images are realistic but affectionate portrayals of a vanishing world that is linked to his personal ideas of family, friendship and childhood.

Duncan's exhilarating seascapes have brought him an extraordinary level of success over the last few years. But his artistic relationship with the sea and particularly sailing is the unexpected result of a terrifying ordeal when the ocean nearly claimed his life on an epic trans-Atlantic voyage. Experiencing the power and the terror of a protracted storm inspired Duncan to start painting dramatic narratives of life at sea which have won him an impressive international reputation. With his latest collection however he has found his thoughts turning in a new direction, towards the reassuring guidance of the lighthouse leading sailors through the dangers that lie close to the shore; his love of adventure finally tempered by the appeal of safe passage into the harbour. "Although I am painting actual scenes, I see what I do as interpretative rather than literal, and I have heard many people describe my work as abstract. I paint around a subject rather than transcribing it directly onto the canvas, and I hope that the energy and vibrancy of each image brings the reality to life for the viewer."

The studio is located just yards from where he set off on his final voyage as a naval officer. "The slipway that built and launched ships to explore the great wide oceans" says Philip, "is now the slipway for me to explore the great ocean of creative expression."

Inside, the studio is a treasure trove of hundreds of pastel paints, lovingly cared for and meticulously organised.

Starting on a new composition, Philip identifies the light source in each scene and begins with white and the more luminous range of bright shades. With broad energetic movements he covers the paper, gradually introducing darker colours until a scene begins to take shape and eventually solidifies into a distinctive and dramatic seascape.

FABIÁN PÉREZ TRUE ROMANCE

"I develop my work in a time that, from my point of view, is much more romantic than the present day. A time when a man would take pride in fixing his tie and women would follow a routine of slow sensual movements which could seduce a man just by lighting a cigarette."

INTOXICATING... PASSIONATE... SEDUCTIVE...

this is the kind of language used by critics discussing Fabian's atmospheric portrayals of life after dark in Buenos Aires. Yet the artist himself recently described his stunning figurative paintings as "romantic". When questioned on this unexpected choice of word he explained: "It's not the actual subjects of my work that are romantic - it's more about me, the artist. I am so often painting remembered scenes and situations from my childhood, at a time when experience had not yet taught me the ways of the world and I was an innocent child. At this time I rarely understood the implications of what I saw on the streets or in certain unlawful establishments, and I believed I was looking at love, affection, and genuine romance. In some ways I think I paint these sophisticated scenes through the admiring eyes of my younger self; in my heart I'm always waiting, and hoping, for the romance to come back."

A NEW PERSPECTIVE

A true European, Bulgarian born Darina has lived in England, Germany, Switzerland and Italy, where she made a thorough study of classical painting technique.

This combination of a solid technical grounding and a cosmopolitan lifestyle has allowed her to master a wide range of styles and media. Influenced by the rhythmic lines of Schiele and the vivid palette of Matisse, her latest compositions are distinctive floral images which experiment with angles and perspectives to create a spacious and energetic re-interpretation of the traditional still life.
